Summer Reading Kick Off at Bethany Library

new info

Dear guests,

Welcome August! While summer reading has wrapped up and school hasn't yet started, kids are getting bored, and it's too hot to play outside. Come to one of our 19 locations in the Metropolitan Library System and stay cool while exploring our shelves or attending unique programs. Our library system in Oklahoma City is a cherished hub of knowledge and community, offering specialized collections and abundant educational resources. Whether you visit in person or access our digital resources from the air-conditioned comfort of your home, we value you as our guests and hope you enjoy all that our library system has to offer.

August brings with it a significant milestone in the life of the Metropolitan Library System and Oklahoma City—the 20th Anniversary of the Ronald J. Norick Downtown Library. Over the past two decades, this location has become a cornerstone of education and cultural enrichment in the heart of the city through dedicated service, learning, and community engagement. From its roots in the first MAPS program to its modern technology, every facet of this facility embodies our commitment to fostering knowledge, innovation, and inclusivity. We're thrilled to continue our role as a vibrant community hub, hosting diverse events and welcoming guests of all ages.

We recently concluded our Summer Reading program at the end of July, and it was inspiring to witness robust engagement and enthusiasm for reading for our guests of all ages and across our libraries. As we transition into the fall season, we hope to continue fostering this love for reading and learning among our patrons.

As students gear up to return to school, our programs and resources are ready to support their educational journey. Join us for a variety of in-person events like tea making, gardening workshops, escape rooms, puzzle races, LitFest events, poetry slams, and trivia nights, all designed to inspire and engage. Find more events at metrolibrary.org/events. Additionally, explore our online resources, including arts and crafts tutorials, interactive coding lessons, tutoring and test prep, exam readiness materials, and business and technology courses. Browse our website to discover even more resources available year-round.

Thank you for your steadfast support and enthusiasm for all the library has to offer. Let's celebrate our continuing commitment to growth, learning, and service at the heart of our community.

Warm regards,

Susan Smith

OKC's LitFest:

A Literary Haven in the Heart of the City

By Kaitlin Lashley, LitFest Attendee

Oklahoma City is often referred to as small, but by proportion, its literary scene is quite impressive—large enough to rival membership and events of a much bigger city. One of the biggest testaments to this is LitFest, a free writing conference that takes place each August.

I attended LitFest last year for the first time. The creative atmosphere was tangible as prospective and experienced writers alike made their way into the beautiful Ronald J. Norick Downtown Library. Participants were greeted on the first floor by a wide variety of exhibitors, including authors, writing guild members, software developers, and podcast hosts; most of them offered fun freebies such as bookmarks, books, or discounts. It was amazing to learn how many organizations and companies supported the local writing community. However, this was just the tip of the iceberg of what LitFest had to offer.

Anywhere from three to six panels were offered per time slot all day, allowing attendees to choose their takeaway from the conference. There were a wide variety of author-led panels, allowing participants to pick and choose the topics of interest. It seemed there was something for everyone, from true crime to romance or fantasy, kidlit or comics or mystery and even D&D and poetry. I particularly enjoyed a workshop with Lou Berney, who required attendees to stretch our creative muscles through a writing exercise where our characters had to show us who they are, rather than tell us.

I write adult fantasy and romance that my co-author and I plan to self-publish, so, I prioritized the panels that pertained most to us. Since LitFest, we have successfully implemented several branding tools that we took away from Hannah Parker's book marketing workshop. We have also used Plotr, developed by Cameron Sutter, to plot the first and second book of our fantasy series.

I can't wait to attend this year's event, set for August 17, and I plan to be better prepared for the conference. Here are my suggested strategies to maximize the Litfest experience.

- One: Plan ahead! With so many amazing panels offered, you need to have your schedule worked out in advance to make sure you get there in time to grab a seat if you can; some panels were so popular they became standing room only.
- Two: Arrive early. There are more than a dozen amazing vendors at LitFest. I want to have time to visit each vendor before panels begin.
- Three: Network. I met many other writers at LitFest last year, and they have provided important feedback on my work since the conference through critique groups and Metro Library hosted write-ins.
- Four: Prepare for disappointment. I say this because I can't be in two places at once—and I wish I could've been able to attend every panel that seemed interesting to me. This is a true testament to LitFest's superior roster.

This year's lineup features more genre and media offerings with short stories, playwriting, craft-focused workshops, and nonfiction. Most notable to me is the increase in publishing programs, five in total, which includes discussions on traditional, indie, small press, and self-publishing routes.

If you are a writer in the OKC metro, don't miss this FREE event. I hope to see you there.

Name: Danielle Ellison
Title: SALT
Library Branch:
Bethany Library

About: Danielle Ellison writes books with relatable characters and epic romances, whether it's a first love or a found one. Find more at danielle-ellison.com.

Book Summary: SALT has been called 'Supernatural meets Charmed meets Buffy.' It follows a teenage witch with no magic, secretly fighting demons to prove herself. One day, she meets a boy who makes her magic come alive, and she finds herself hunted by demons.

Q&A: What inspires you as a writer? Other writers inspire me, especially as I get the opportunity to connect with them at events like LitFest. We share our woes, our experience in the industry, and our stories with each other. We celebrate the wins and mourn the losses. We all share this passion that's contagious, it pushes me to want more, to do more, to write more, and to share as a mentor with those coming after me. I've really enjoyed building that mentor role and getting to use my decades of experience with them.

Name: Scott Garrison
Title: From the Universe to Me
Library Branch: Community Libraries - Choctaw, Harrah, Jones, Luther, & Nicoma Park

About: Scott E. Garrison is passionate about sharing new, queer stories, and he is also the host of the podcast, "Unsolicited Book Reviews."

Book Summary: Tobias Gavin, 18, grapples with his sexuality, hiding his true self for a "normal" life until he meets Gareth David at college. When Gareth, his history professor, challenges Tobias to confront his feelings, depression, anxiety, and heartbreak, Tobias learns that embracing his identity and trusting others could lead to happiness and valuable life lessons.

Q&A: What writing advice do you have? Writing a novel, novella, poetry, etc. is going to be different for everyone, but I think that it's important to read as much as possible. If you are writing a thriller, you should read as many thrillers as you can, so you can see how other writers approach the genre. You can learn writing skills by observing other writers in the wild. This is also a way to find inspiration. Of course, you can always draw from your own experiences, but sometimes that is difficult when you are writing a ghost story or space odyssey and haven't met a ghost or been on a spaceship lightyears away from earth. That's why it's important to read! When you sit down to write your story, you'll need to throw every trick and skill you've learned about writing over the years, but I think it's vitally important to be adaptable and be willing to change things as you write. Being unwilling to deviate from your plan will only lead to writer's block. Sometimes characters want to go in a different direction and sometimes writing out a planned scene just doesn't work well once written out, so you need to make sure listen to your characters and be adaptable.

Name: Kim Ventrella
Title: The Secret Life of Sam
Library Branch:
Downtown OKC Library

About: Kim Ventrella writes whimsical middle grade novels for the spooky at heart. Find more at kimventrella.com.

Book Summary: After Sam's dad dies in a car accident, he's sent to live with a long-lost aunt in Holler, Oklahoma. He wants nothing to do with the town until he discovers a mysterious tree behind his school that transports him back home, where Pa—now seemingly alive—is waiting for him. Sam is thrilled to be reunited but soon learns that getting Pa back for good could be more complicated—and dangerous—than he ever imagined.

Q&A: What are some writing tips and tricks you've picked up over the years? When I'm building a story, I ask myself two questions: what does my main character want and what do they need? There is a big difference. Their want will drive the action of the story, as they strive to fulfill their goal, encounter increasingly difficult obstacles, and react by changing their tactics. Their need is something emotional, often a lack that they're unaware of, that will lead them to change as a person by the end of the story. This inner change will come about gradually as a result of all the obstacles they've faced. The most satisfying stories are the ones that have both strong action and emotional storylines. If your story is all action with no emotional stakes, readers don't have any reason to care about what's happening. To misquote Stephen King, first you have to make readers fall in love with your characters, then you can start killing people off.

The Art of Creative Research:
A Field Guide for Writers
Philip Gerard

808.02 G357a

Available formats: Book, eBook

Many authors of fiction and non-fiction alike may find themselves struggling to gather research for information and inspiration. They are often aware that they must familiarize themselves with the elements of their worlds, from religion to the natural world, but how can they get started in a manageable, referential way? Philip Gerard's The Art of Creative Research: A Field Guide for Writers is a brief but excellent starting point for those who may have abandoned their love of creative research in school. Though primarily written for those writing narrative nonfiction pieces, Gerard provides excellent practical advice for any author who does not know where to start research, those who have gotten stuck in a dead end, and those who struggle to consolidate their work. I give The Art of Creative Research: A Field Guide for Writers a strong recommendation to anyone embarking on a project.

Are you looking for a fun writing guide to help you structure your novel? "Save the Cat Writes a Young Adult Novel" is a great resource that utilizes Blake Snyder's famous "Save the Cat" screenwriting method to approach the story beat structure. Brody's book walks you through the 15 essential Save the Cat plot points, while illustrating the plot points with examples pulled from some of the most popular young adult titles. This book also covers topics like universal story genres, as well as other writing tips and writing advice. And while there aren't any actual cats in this book (sigh), it's a worthwhile read for anyone looking to write a book for teen readers, and any writer looking for a new way to create a dynamic roadmap to your story.

Rainbow Rowell

FIC ROW

Available formats: Book, eBook, eAudiobook

Mid-thirties mom Shiloh has been married and divorced by the time she finds herself back in Omaha, in the same house she grew up in, with all her original life plans trashed. When she's invited to the wedding of an old high school classmate, she is petrified at the thought of running into Cary, her once best friend. Everyone thought they would end up together, but Shiloh and Cary lost touch while she was in college and he joined the Navy. They haven't even spoken in over a decade. After Shiloh and Cary spend hours ignoring everyone but each other at the wedding and share a slowwww slow dance, everyone knows there's something going on again between them — except maybe Shiloh and Cary. Author Rainbow Rowell delivers once again with realistic but hopeful insight about working-class life and love. This is a sentimental ballad of a romance novel, a slow burn with big theater-major feelings that nevertheless comes across as too real to be mushy or cliché.

This beautifully written picture book embraces diversity and celebrates the perfection of being proud of your heritage by exploring the importance of your name. In this story, we are introduced to six different children who proudly celebrate their names and backgrounds: Hé Xiao-Guang, Ofa Kivaha Tupoumalohi, Bijan Hosseini, Nizhoni Yazzie, Xóchitl Luna, and Akosua Acheampong. These captivating children of Chinese, Tongan, Persian, Navajo, Mexican, and Ghanaian descent also honor their ancestors and cultural histories. The reader explores the culture of each child while learning the importance of their name and the importance of pronunciation. The illustrations are another reason why I highly recommend this book.

The Great Schoolhouse Race

By Buddy Johnson, Special Collections Manager

August means back-to-school for many of us in Oklahoma. Frankly, I'm glad my school days are over. Having to walk to school in 102-degree August heat while cozy, warm sweaters and zip-up turtlenecks fresh from a Penney's back-to-school sale mocked me from their hangars was one of life's greatest annoyances. I wasn't then, but am now, glad that school was there for me when I needed it and I'm much more appreciative of the sacrifices my folks made to provide that warm apparel when I needed it. It helps to remember that when my daughter screams at me when I push her to work hard and study. Let's take a look back and see what kind of struggles our ancestors went through to get an education.

Not long after Oklahoma Territory was formed in May of 1890, Oklahoma City created its first Board of Education. The Board provided money for a school in each of the city's four wards. They didn't provide money for new buildings, though, so classes were held in storefronts.

Conditions for learning were grim. The classrooms were crowded and often unheated while supplies and equipment were nowhere to be found. As for textbooks, students had to bring books from home and the teachers had to devise ways to teach 70 children the same thing from 70 different books!

Finally, in June 1893 the first school bond issue was passed which set aside $70,000 to fund permanent buildings for schools. Opponents of the bond issue quickly challenged the legality of the election which tied up the funds until the district court settled the matter. It took until the spring of 1894 to reach a decision, but the court did acknowledge the legality of the election. But in a Solomonic twist of justice, the courts only allowed $45,000 of the bond money to be allocated.

Although there was now only $45,000 to work with, construction on the new schools began in earnest in 1894. The rivalry between the north and south sides of the city had already developed by this time and it showed in the race to see which side could be the first to construct a brick school building in the city. Residents visited the building sites everyday to encourage the construction crews and cheer them on. Parties with no rooting interest took to wagering which side would win and bookmakers did a brisk trade around town. Emerson, the first northside school, had to overcome an early protest by residents who said, it was foolish to build a school so far out into the cornfield, (it still stands at 715 North Walker). Washington School won the race and classes began at the new school at 315 South Walker in the spring semester of 1895. The bill for building these two schools came in at $44,000, just under the $45,000 allocated. If you think you're seeing double it's because they saved money by using the same design. The only difference is that Washington has a curved cap on the tower and Emerson's is straight.

Celebrating Two Decades of Excellence:

The 20th Anniversary of the Ronald J. Norick Downtown Library

By Zoe Elrod, Internal Communications Coordinator

Metro Library Employee, Special Collections Archive

On August 17, 2024, the Ronald J. Norick Downtown Library in Oklahoma City celebrates its 20th anniversary, marking two decades of service, learning, and community engagement in the Arts District. This 114,130-square-foot facility has been a cornerstone of education and cultural enrichment since its inception in 2004.

Library services in downtown Oklahoma City began in 1901 with the Carnegie Library at NW 3rd and Robinson Ave, supported by the Philomatheia Club and Andrew Carnegie. The original Carnegie Library was razed to build a new library on the same site, which opened in 1954 at 131 NW 3rd (now Dean A. McGee). This library notably reopened quickly after the Oklahoma City bombing in 1995, primarily repairing damage to its windows to resume serving the community.

In 1993, voters approved the Metropolitan Area Projects (MAPS) initiative, which funded the construction of the new Ronald J. Norick Downtown Library. Named after former Mayor Ron Norick, who championed the MAPS program, the library opened on August 17, 2004, equipped with modern amenities and technology to meet the evolving needs of its patrons.

The library offers classrooms, study rooms, conference facilities, a children's program room, the Route 66 Computer Lab, the 46th Star Auditorium, and the Friends Event Room. It houses extensive collections and services on two floors, with spaces for meetings and offices. It provides book returns and modern amenities like public computers, mobile printing, free Wi-Fi, and comprehensive copying and scanning services, including Wi-Fi hotspots for checkout.

Specialized collections include Genealogy, Americans and the Holocaust, topographic maps, and the Special Collections and Research Department, preserving materials like primary sources, photographs, and rare books about Oklahomans in the Oklahoma Room.

The library also offers Experience Passes for local attractions such as the Oklahoma City Museum of Art and the Oklahoma History Center.

Today, the Ronald J. Norick Downtown Library stands as a pillar of Oklahoma City, hosting events like Paranormal Fest, LitFest, Geek Con, storytimes, adult programming, punk shows, arts and crafts, puppet shows, and more.

As it celebrates its 20th anniversary, the library continues evolving to meet community needs while upholding excellence in education, culture, and community spirit.

Here's to many more years of growth, learning, and service at the heart of Oklahoma City. Happy 20th anniversary to the Ronald J. Norick Downtown Library!
